

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method and apparatus for depositing material from a target onto a semiconductor wafer. The wafer is positioned above a chuck that is heated by a chuck heater. Radiant heat flow from the chuck to the wafer is the primary heat source for the wafer. Thus by controlling the chuck heater temperature the wafer temperature can be maintained within a desired range to effectuate desired characteristics in the deposited material.